The Boston Advertiser, in commenting on Vermont labor matters, recalls the political exploits of the Knights of Labor in Rutland some 16 years ago and says: "This episode is recalled by the fact that now, when another year of strikes has come in, the Union Signal, the organ of trade unionism in Vermont, is calling its followers to renewed political activity. B. F. Healey of Barre, president of the State Federation of Labor, is named as a possible candidate for governor. The matter has not much importance, except from the example that we have of what labor has done in local political circles. In view of this, and of the spread of labor agitation this year, the politicians in Vermont may as well bear the warning in mind."
